So, the obvious theory is that hedge funds have sold GME shares short to the oblivion, multiple times over the float. Also, what is fueling the M-OASS is the continuation of purchases of shares and holding, which in apes minds is hopeful to trigger to skew. There are many institutions out there, including very rich people, with access to much more information we have. If any one of these institutions or whales out there truly believes this, they could easily buy up a huge amount of shares to trigger the skew. The question is then, why hasn't it happened? If I was a millionaire or billionaire at this moment, and know that purchasing a large amount of shares would cause the skew and make me A LOT of money, I would have done it by now.

Just adding an edit, Just as I expected, many downvotes without any explanations. That actually solidifies my theory.
