

Title: I think it's time to ask the SEC for some clarification.

Author: zgomot23

Created 2022-09-04 22:10:00 UTC

Permalink: /r/GME/comments/x5z955/i_think_its_time_to_ask_the_sec_for_some/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/GME/comments/x5z955/i_think_its_time_to_ask_the_sec_for_some/

As you all have seen by now and I think there's no more reason for any link, the MSM has been jumping to point out how Gustavo Arnal and Ryan Cohen colluded to pump and dump that other stock, so they sold their shares at the peak after allegedly tricking the retail. Leaving aside the lack of respect for the dead individual, they forgot to mention the stock didn't plummet when they sold, it plummeted the moment the SEC filings became public that they sold (how convenient- so selling didn't do anything, but the news of selling did it- magic). I believe it's time to ask the SEC what the darkpools are, after all. To my understanding they were a good thing because their role was to prevent large market volatility due to institutional/insiders selling large blocks of shares. So if this is the case and everything works as intended, why was there a need for articles stating how insider selling crashed the stock? It's obvious to me that their darkpools don't work as they "intended", so perhaps it's time to disable trading OTC for the "meme stocks" considering, well, it doesn't really work anyway. Start being vocal and expose those parasites, this is literally an insult and a huge slap on our faces. I'm gonna write a formal mail to the SEC to explain this situation.