This is my short story on how I know hedgies r fuk.

So recently my car broke down. The transmission broke and unfortunately I can't afford to fix it (also not worth fixing). So I go to the dealership as I still owe money on it so pretty much my only option is to roll the negative equity into a new loan.

When I found a car I liked we started talking numbers and was told that I would need 3500 down to make it work. Now with the market in the state it's in, the total amount of my shares in GameStop hover around that range.

I know my shares are non-negotiable but I thought it was just a funny coincidence. Then I asked the dealer who the loan offer was through.

It was through Citadel.

I didn't even know they had a loan service but that all the more confirmed I couldn't do it. They were literally telling me "You need a new car, sell your shares"

No thanks, I'll find another way.
