Have you noticed that even though the shares outstanding and the volume has 4x, the shares available to borrow at any given time rarely surpassed 250k shares? The same amount as it was before the splivy? They're getting these phantom shares from ETFs, and the ETFs generally have a cap each per day, and I think we've hit that cap. Just because GME split 4x, the ETF rules regarding creation redemption don't change, you can still only create a certain hard limit daily.

200k shares is not nearly enough anymore. It made an impact when the volume was 1m a day, today there was 8m volume. Pissing into the wind. Even on a low 3-4m volume day like we saw all last week, it's not enough. And throw on top the DTCC being a dumpster fire behind the curtain and brokers scrambling quietly...

I noticed this too, but my brain is too smooth for me to point it out. It really looks like we're hitting their limits. Can't wait til we near 100% DRS. I've been so zen for so long I want to feel excitement again.

At this rate I think their game will crumble before we hit 100%, but I'm something of a completionist so still gonna try
