Serious question: We've seen a handful of the top SHF go long...what would the implications be if these SHF DRS'd their long shares at the last minute before the ex-dividend date and there were more DRS'd shares than available float in CS? CS will receive the 1st of the new shares, but if there are more DRS'd shares than avail float, which DRS accounts get the new dividend shares? Is it priority based off portfolio quantity or age of account? I know it's a wild crazy f'n idea but seriously what would happen??

If you can't have more DRS'd shares than avail float then what happens at 100%? Again if SHF DRS'd their shares last minute this would/could cause many retail traders to lose out on the spl dividend, right??

DRS YO 🤩!
