Ryan Cohen's recent tweet certainly has everyone fired up, and also got my synapses firing.

DD of old shined a light on the potential importance of the "zombie companies," and the comments theorized about launching a stock market trading these companies that would be resurrected and recapitalized during the forced closing of SHF.

It got me thinking. We speculate that toy r us, sears and blockbuster to be part of this potential plan. That would give him brand recognition across multiple retail segments, becoming amazons largest competitor. It really could encompass, theoretically, a presence across the entire US retail market, aside from homes and cars.

But wait. Pulte. Hmmmm. Ever wonder why this guy seems to have inside info? Do we really think a bunch of smelly, smooth brained apes convinced him of what was going to happen? Or is there going to be some opportunity for RC and Pulte to gain major equity in the company? There are other possible answers but that sure is spicy.

So what's he got planned for cars?
