XX lurker here (1/2 DRSeD) who has been holding since January. I apologize if this has already been answered but I haven't seen it. And if I used the wrong flair, please let me know. I couldn't find the Question flair it said to use.

Anyway, if the price of GME is being manipulated (and I stipulate that it is) then why is there a resistance floor? If I'm not mistaken, the price hasn't closed below $135 in the past 9 months. If they are trying to scare people into selling, why don't they make it go as low as it can? I personally would love if it dropped to $40 again because I would pick up far more than last time. But is there a reason they let it go up to about $200 and then only drop it to ~$60?

Thanks!
