This post intends to document trivia for the history of GME and the mother of all short squeezes.

Around four years ago, give or take six months, the original discussion about this GME play occurred in video chat on youtube. The conversation that transpired laid out the prophecy, and by that prophecy the path toward supporting GameStop's transition was concocted. You'll have to read the Tendieman post in my post history to learn more.

The true affiliations of each individual in the group who participated in that conversation cannot be known, but what is known is that the video under which the GME conversation began was part of a still existing channel named Sandman, a channel dedicated to framing men's issues. As such, the conversations under videos of that channel were male centric, so a question was posed in that conversation about the role of women and unsubscribed males. This is an important bit of information. Supposedly dejected rejected men who were essentially communicating in a safe space for men's issues were attempting to plan to individually profit from the mother of all short squeezes in a way that was inclusive of everyone. That statement might not strike everyone the same, but its significance will not be missed by people who are involved in things like interventions, marriage counseling, addiction groups, offender groups, and such. Exhibiting a will to be inclusive is a big deal.

The movement from the original reddit betting sub was part of the plan, because of a couple reasons. Foremost was to escape FUD by making a better dedicated sub controlled by apes. Next was the understanding that subreddits would need to cater to differing mental persuasions. If the GME subreddits discussions were like the chat in the youtube Sandman channel, then it would not feel inviting to every mindset. So, it was clear that the first major division would be for women and unsubscribed men. As it turned out, everyone was better behaved than expected, but nuance still tells.

{The anti brigading initiative prevents me from naming subreddits, and it might be used as an excuse to hide this historic account pertaining to GME as a play into the mother of all short squeezes. I don't know. We'll see.}

One subreddit became well known for its attempt at compiling the best DD and professional opinions. It was founded also to better cater to women, families, and normies. This was the necessary division predicted in the conversation four years ago. It was also predicted that the sub would be the first to be crushed by "the system" interests because it would lack sufficient skepticism.

Welp, it appears that sophisticated shills have finally initiated a takedown of that other sub. Yes, I know that signs were there early last year. I do not expect it be taken offline, but instead more strongly censored. I believe that the proof of a more exerted takeover by corporate shills is shown by the apathy tactic used. Apathy is the secret fourth letter of FUD. Apathy is the strongest manipulator, so reliance on it tends to be a sign that it must succeed in the view of its deployers. We can study how it happened to get a sense of how it will be executed across the (social) media spectrum.

First, there needs to be a reason for people to want to separate from each other. One way to do this is to create a strawman and attack the strawman in a cringe public display. What happened to the anti work sub was that strawman. The anti brigading initiative hinders discussion about the details, so other subs are unable to identify it as a strawman. Additionally, actual brigading by shills posing as anti work refugees then can swarm GME centric subs to begin the apathy inducing effort. Mods are shocked and scrambling to shut down the noise. Subreddit members begin to distance their participation from any post that is heavily commented on or misrepresented by anti work shills. In a single day the sub cuts off other members and shuts down certain essential communications (posts, comments) to preserve sub integrity. {See my recent post history for an example.}

There are many other ways that apathy can be induced to cause division and eventual takeover or takedown. Use of a strawman that included corporate news and concerted shill swarms was a sophisticated tactic. It doesn't have to be sophisticated. Rumors from mods or about mods can destroy faith. Mods failing to show wise judgment when tested by these attacks can cause members to quit. Shills pretending that a mass doxxing event is happening can do it. There are many tactics. Apathy causes people to detach from something or someone because they choose not to care about it (as much).

Watch. Learn.
