

Title: Whether by design or accidental, information on GME subs has been suppressed. Case and point: options

Bold statement: "I just like the stock" and "all I know is buy HODL DRS" has actually become the ultimate shill campaign.

I almost hate to use the word "shill" because like I said in the title, it may have been accidental and not necessarily done with ill intent, but either way it's become detrimental.

Fact of the matter is that any time new ideas are presented in GME subs they are almost immediately shut down by fucking 8 month old accounts with (somehow) 50,000 carma screaming "I trust Cohen so all I know is I like the stonk".

Often, comments like this are top comments, and the comments underneath are literally the same fucking thing to the point where it drowns out healthy conversation.

These are the accounts you trust? 8 month old accounts with a series of zingers and one liners? Again I'm not saying that all of these are fake accounts / bots, but use some discretion.

"I just like the stonk! And if you haven't heard, buy HODL drs!" - wow, tell me something I don't already know.

Case and point: options

For nearly a full fucking year people were screaming "don't play options, it gives money to the bad guys!"

Excuse me but, how in the fuck is LEVERAGING your gme position a good thing for the bad guys?

I understand people giving warnings about options, and yes you can lose a lot of money and lose it fast, but to completely silence the conversation and spin the narrative that options are bad for retail?

Fuck. Off.

You should be ashamed if that was you.

Remember if you can't beat them, join them.

Obviously anti-gme sentiment does not work here. We're diamond handed apes... That is a very good thing.

BUT when the enemy sees they can't split up the apes, what should they do next?

Maybe they join in on the banter, and get stupid with all the stupids? Maybe they get SO LOUD and stupid that they actually drown out useful conversation?

I've been saying it for a while now and got down voted to shit. But after the very well received options post yesterday from u/Doin_the_Bulldance I figured I would speak up again. I'm not trying to berate or belittle anyone. I just want the subs to be better.

If even one person takes something positive away from this, then I'm happy.

THINK CRITICALLY FOLKS!
