Just got a call from FINRA where I submitted a complaint regarding stock split receipt, not correctly received from fudelity, as it was not in the form of a dividend.

When I contacted fudelity directly, they informed me I didn't know what I was talking about and send me a link to learn about stock splits. They confirmed no tax implications but it was processed as a normal stock split.

After the GameStop release confirming the form of dividend, I decided to reach out to FINRA anonymously. In their response call a moment ago FINRA let me know that this is an issue they are aware of and have received multiple other complaints on the same subject. They asked me if I was still wanting to remain anonymous and I said yes.

Can't post on SS, so figured I'd post here.
