"Why is this not fucking glued to the top of r/superstonk is beyond me. <https://web.archive.org/web/20211028000950/https://github.com/Loopring/loopring-web-v2/commit/de1601d253991fd4c493a8d5629c02c7d38b5e23> \- this (line 74 from api-wrapper) clearly show the loopring nft bridge with nft.gstop-sandbox.com. While this one <https://crt.sh/?id=5538535675> clearly show not only the nft.gstop-sandbox.com, the underlying api existence but the domain SSL ownership to Gamestop. That's it. That's the game. GG. This will be the first large scale token support by a public trade company with over 42 million customers across 4 816 store worldwide. Forget about retail adoption of bitcoin: what they are about to delivered is fucking nuts. Thanks to u/kyytes and all the other ape who dig it out... three days ago and got five freaking upvote."

EDIT:

While I advise you to keep your tits jacked, you may want to un-jack them ever so slightly. I didn't know this and no one else has mentioned this— I feel this comment from u/kuilin is important and should be discussed:

"As a programmer, while I agree that many signs point to GME and Loopring working together, this link in particular is not evidence."

It clearly says on the top of the linked github page:

>This commit does not belong to any branch on this repository, and may belong to a fork outside of the repository.

Pay attention to this. Anyone can put anything on a page like this and have it look like it's from Loopring. Sure, this could be a commit that they added and then deleted (a web archive of the commits page of the master branch would prove it), but it also could be some random commit made by someone completely unassociated with Loopring or Gamestop.

Edit: Here, I just made this to demonstrate what I'm talking about. Have a look at this: <http://web.archive.org/web/20211106062439/https://github.com/Loopring/website/commit/7be6b885b28012636099497eafbcf5e81ada2900>"

EDIT 2:

u/kuilin has made a separate thread to discuss this topic. While he thinks it's more likely that this is real code from Loopring, it would be possible for someone to upload this themselves. He demonstrated this in the edit to his comment I posted above. There's a lot of real code here and only a bit of it mentions GameStop, lending to its likely authenticity.

EDIT 3:

This is a fascinating post from u/OneTinker dissecting this code and looking at what it actually does:

EDIT 4:

My personal opinion after reading lots of comments:

I'm no coder, but if someone did fake this, they went through a ton of effort to make it look legit. u/OneTinker's post dissecting the code and its functionality has done a lot to convince me that this is not the case and that this code is from Loopring.

Matt Finestone was head of business at Loopring and is now head of blockchain at GameStop. He left to work on a "once-in-a-lifetime" project that he couldn't talk about for some months— a project in the Ethereum space (https://matthewfinestone.medium.com/thank-you-loopring-16993766c200). GameStop is clearly working on something involving NFTs. Loopring has publicly said they'll be launching an NFT marketplace with a to-be-named partner in Q4 (https://medium.com/loopring-protocol/loopring-quarterly-update-2021-q3-bd083d94ca17). GameStop would need something like Loopring to make mass adoption of NFTs possible. Vitalik Buterin, founder of Ethereum, has publicly said Loopring and zkRollups are the future of Ethereum (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XW0QZmtbjvs&t=4267s). And as someone pointed out in another thread, Loopring is almost certainly aware of these rumors about their code and GameStop— if they knew this was a bad actor posting the code, it would be in their best interest to deny the rumors publicly and maintain their credibility.

If the simplest explanation is the most likely, then I say this code is legit from Loopring and we have an announcement to look forward to in the next 7-8 weeks.
