

Title: Looks like some stop loss hunting yesterday. Stop losses make it easier for funds to drive the $GME share price down. No need to help them out.

Price action yesterday looked like stop loss hunting around noon to 12:30. Today might end up red or green or even sideways. Doesn't matter, funds hunt stop losses. They can trigger the stop loss which adds momentum to their efforts to drive the price of $GME down without the funds spending additional resources.

Since funds don't let you know their specific tactics, why let them know yours via stop losses?
