It's perfectly normal for a falling shelf to disable the fire extinguisher mechanism, don't just blindly believe everything you read here.

Just think about it, suddenly everyone and their mother is a fire safety protocol and installment expert with a lifetime experience. Ffs people we've been through a lot and we apes are still this easy to be bamboozled.

I've been installing fire extinguisher systems for 15 years, my father was also a master of this trade and let me tell you, 3 out of 10 fire systems are disabled by some kind of falling object, but we don't report on it because it has nothing to do with gme.

P:s. To the moon fellow Cohen apes brrrrrr
