I've been saying this for months now that the ban on posting gains and positions in these forums was a shill tactic. I still don't know why we are following it.

These posts brought encouragement and really have no harm. I have asked for a legitimate argument and never got one. No real reason not to. What it would show is the sheer absurd amount of shares owned by crayon eating apes. Guess who wouldn't want the public to know the float was owned over and over?

If DFV never posted the yolo positions post this stonk might not have gotten as much attention.

I've said the same thing about the shills telling everyone not to buy calls. That has some merit though in the sense of not buying weekly $400 calls.
