

Title: Some Observations, a Little Ranting and a Forward Thinking Question for the Better Prepared

Author: infant_ape

Created 2021-10-20 20:54:53 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/qcaq8m/some_observations_a_little_ranting_and_a_forward/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/qcaq8m/some\_observations\_a\_little\_ranting\_and\_a\_forward/

This is here because, hey... DD doesn't equal "echoed confirmation bias". Rather, I would think it could entail open discussion. God forbid you ask something against the narrative over on the big show, right? You either echo the shit, or you post "wut doing" or "sir, now they're"... memes. I mean, they were funny for like 11 seconds. But FFS, it's a bit much.

And maybe someone here will send me away feeling a little better than I do now. But stick your accusations of FUD up your hidey hole, eh? Because, well.. I have no actual fear here. Uncertainty?... well, FFS, this whole scenario is a literal manifestation of uncertainty. And doubt?. Well... IDK. I guess, by definition, uncertainty includes doubt by default. But it's not for you. It's my own, and it's not in stone, and it comes and goes.

I'm a mid level XXX holder, averaging down twice over 90 days last spring (thank God for them spring dips, lol). And I just DRS'd 90% to CS, starting with TDA (shit) then to Fidelity( for the win). So I'm here for the long haul. But here are a microscopic fraction of my thoughts, and a question:

Man.. so much has run through my head since that sham of a report. I especially love the rumor that an initial report was flat out rejected by SEC commissioners and the released one was a forced rewrite so as to keep the findings of blatant fuckery out of the public eye. (But I got nothing to back up that claim). I mean, FFS... at some point, do the fuckers holding the reigns just become (or reveal themselves as) too powerful to bring down? But I digress.

Side note before my question: The actual first thing in a long time to sort of deflate my sails was this headline from over on the big show sub:

***SEC documents show that FTDs are nearly never delivered. In 2008 only 0.12% of FTDs were bought back in..A system where all DTCC participants agree to not buy each other in...the DTCC claims to be powerless. Blackhole at 192 million FTDs min. \*\*Original Flair: DD\*\* Serious Documents***

When I read that (and the post) I felt like William Wallace when he pulled off the helmet from Longshank's protector knight and looks down and sees it's Robert the Bruce who fucked him. Just fucking deflated. I mean... what in high Harry's ass do you do when everyone just sort of nods at each other and agrees to forever just... let each other off the hook? And FFS... don't hit me with "there are a few absolute laws of the universe, and one is that all shorts must close". Yes. I know. But... See above. Clearly, they don't "must" shit. "Well, everyone's looking now.". Meh. They've been looking all year. Reddit apes cannot be the only ones digging down into the fuckery, right?... Still... they ain't "must" shit.

Based on that above headline, would locking up a float even be effective? I mean, we all know it SHOULD be. But what happens if the powers just decide to.... not enforce the rules. Which, it seems, is what's happening on the daily? Oh look, margin call time! Nice! Oh look, fails left and right! Sweet!

Then from the DTCC... "Hey guys, listen up! See that "override" button next to "forced liquidations"? Go ahead and just give that a click."...

While I don't really think the RC and the board of GME have our tendies, or any sort of OUR well-being in mind at all over the state of their own company (nor should they as a priority, TBH)... I hope that the success of the company does tie us in via their actions; a share recall (after proof of fuckery) and/or an NFT dividend... IDK. SOMETHING. Anything to give them leverage to say "See, you knew this was going on, and if you don't do right by us, we are going to blow it wide open and take everything from the DTCC for negligence and/or abuse, sue the fuck out of everyone, and you'll have to explain why to the international markets, MFers". At which time the self regulating fucks will realize that, no matter what they've been promising their besties under the sheets late at night... there would be more damage if RC and GME went nuclear on them, giving them next fucking level leverage, and so now SHF's are truly on their own.

And I'm hoping that said leverage will force hands to allow the price shoot up w/o turning off any buttons for retail or anyone else, and sit their while those who would never otherwise be made to cover go **but but... wE Sald We WoUIDn'T DOOOO THIs tO eAcH oThEr...** like little bitches. But again... IDK.

So just IN CASE all this happens.. I have a question that even a little searching hasn't really gotten me answers on.

Aside from what your ultimate plans are for your funds (investments, land, purchases, etc)... Where in high holy hell do all you apes plan on putting the proceeds once you sell on the way down? Like Immediately after selling. Wut doing wit munney?

I'm trying to look into what's a viable option to insure (via FDIC) a shit ton more than the cliché 250K dollars in a given account, or what do do if there are larger sums to deposit... but only see suggestions such as "segment it into various accounts of different types" (lol, like what, 85 accounts each insured at only 250K lol) or set up a high net worth account with a bank that caters to the 3MM and up crowd". (I'm going to assume that's not done overnight, and not w/o a significant deposit that, to be frank, I just ain't fucking in possession of right now.)

Or... do I just disconnect the account I have set up with CS and have them mail me some big ass checks that I sit on until I situate myself. It seems that if there IS an account connected, the funds go straight in. CS is NOT fucking around with babysitting anyone's shit. (Re: checks: I imagine when the time comes, once I wave a set of 7 or 8 digit checks in front of someone, I'll be able to get that high net worth shit set up most ricky tick while I sip espresso or some shit). But in the meantime... and ESPECIALLY with all the fuckery taking place in banking currently... I just don't feel cool about depositing 10, 20 or 50MM into fucking Wells Fargo and having it sit there, essentially unsecured (uninsured) while I try to figure out what to do. I have visions of the movie "blow" where Johnny Depp went down to Panama to collect up his shit all routine and shit, and was told "yeah... about that.... The banks have been nationalized, and it's been claimed by the gov't. So yeah... peace out, bruh."

I mean, can you imagine the shit storm that would ensue with MOASS? Has anyone stopped to think that SHF lawyers would be trying to freeze funds that went.... to fucking EVERYone... or try to claw them back. Or whatever. We've already seen what these fuck faces will do to not lose. And I don't think we've come close to seeing it all.

So... what are y'all finna do when those tendies get in? Anyone got anything in place now, or just gonna git dem checks in the mail?...

Thanks for coming to my TED rant. Peace. And hold. And DRS.

Edit: As mentioned in comments below... i absolutely DO find value in the community fucking holding and never dropping this shit. Wait them out, and SOMETHing is going to happen. Who knows what, but what we DO know is they'll never be able to get back down to levels they wanted GME at. So they will probably burn cash- every fucking- day- for the foreseeable future. I'm cool with even just that for a long, long while.