

Title: So after seeing the photos from the GameStop mobile wallet I have come to the conclusion that GameStop will make billions. You may not like my comparison but Ryan Cohen doesn't care, he is a genius...

So after checking out the App coming soon for ios (Iphone), I am starting to understand what GameStop is doing. Being that I tried to sign up for opensea with my daughter (an artist). We both decided NFTs weren't for us. Not because we didn't like the NFT idea, but the marketplace just wasn't easy. It seemed like an old clunky version of ebay or something. It wasn't easy for my generation or hers. It felt tedious. My comparison is like going to the browser version of a broker account a few years ago and buying stock with scroll down menus, %, limits, and boxes to fill in, making investing seem much harder than it really is. You know what made this so much easier? You won't like the answer...

But first, let's talk about what GameStop is doing. GameStop is going to add NFTs to your mobile app, show the cost of your items, and allow you to put items on the marketplace with a click of a button. Things you sell, go to the new buyer instantly. Contracts filled, sell order filled, and the NFT sent. Things you buy, go right to your wallet. Not tedious. If they have managed to do this and make it as easy as possible.... all I can say is WOW. I hate to say it, but GameStop is creating the Robinhood version of a NFTs marketplace. Don't kill me yet, because it's going to make billions! And while Robinhood itself is still trying to figure out how to give users their own individual wallets for their doggy coins, GameStop started off with the most important part first, YOUR WALLET. This may also be the most difficult part in getting the average person to understand NFTs. The wallet.

And it is the first thing GameStop is dealing with. The more people with a GameStop wallet, the bigger the marketplace.

I know we hate Robinhood, and rightfully so, but it did make investing for the average person much easier. Well... GameStop seems to be targeting this for their NFT marketplace. And all I can say is WOW.

Now let's move onto the part of the photo that says...

Coins | NFTs

Oh boy. If they do the coins marketplace, I will move all my coins over instantly. And do all my buying there as well. I have no connection to coinbase or any other marketplace, so GameStop would be my spot. Just on the small % they take through these marketplaces is worth billions....
