it's the simplest way to try and divide the group. gamestop options are no different than the rest of the market. the crazy volatility gets priced into the GME options.

SO here's the simplest way to screw the hedgies broken down into 3 choices.

#1. if you know what you're doing, have traded options for years, and believe it's a great opportunity to buy options contracts....then yes... do that!

#2. if you've never traded options but have an undeniable itch to scratch... try trading some contracts on one of the cheaper basket stocks like the extremely dark colored berry stock

#3. if you have a normal job and have never bought options before, just buy, hodl, DRS

Buy, HODL , DRS is the way but individuals that know how the market works and can multiply their holdings using the options market should stick it to the hedgies for everything they can. I'm a C+ options player so GME options are far too risky for me at this point
