Good morning everyone, hope you're all well. This isn't weekend FUD just a simple twonk asking hopefully a simple question about the compensation section on the voting.

Firstly I've voted and voted for to all but was thinking this morning about it, I mean I'm all for it, the guys n gals who run gamestop should have a vested interest in the company so I see no issue with them owning part of it, what better motivation and bullish sign could there be to the investors than the board owning part of the company they run.

But the question is, say they give, I dunno, the CEO 10k shares as part of this scheme, where do they come from? Is it part of the float they buy back or is it part of the reserve they have over and above the float?

Cause I was wondering if it was a bit of a buy back but by the back door as it were, or just business as usual, me no knows, so me ask.

Thanks for all answers and hope I'm not too dumb, have looked on here, superstonk etc but couldn't see do thought I'd ask. Cheers.
