would be a shame if the utilization rate for lendable shares was at 100%

Instead of giving you X shares you bought, they give you a paper stating you bought X shares with the promise of giving you the shares at a later date.

They do this for every buyer.

Problem is they are giving out more papers than shares available.

And now, all people show up at once at the store demanding their shares.

They oversold beyond 100% and it is a big problem.

They will need to buy several times the same shares to solve the situation.

But...no one is selling shares to them...

... unless they offer a substantial amount of $ that potentially can be infinite.
