Title: In the end game what would happen those investors that haven't DRS'd their shares in a worst case scenario?

If the shares from these big name brokerages like TD Ameritrade, Fudelity, etc. are found to only be synthetics whenever the whole float is DRS'd, what would happen?

Would they disappear out of accounts, would they be sellable still? Would people capped at receiving the $500k that most brokers are insured for? I'm just curious about what would happen in this scenario? I have some shares DRS'd but a much larger portion in TD ameritrade. I'm personally worried about Computershares ability to quickly processed trades and selling.

But after seeing Ryan Cohen twitter post, I'm considering going full DRS. So I want to know what risks I run by not DRSing.

Thanks apes, today was a great day! :)
