It's not a memestock - that's just a moniker given by the astroturfing Wall Street network.

For anyone interested in some actual information that can help you make a decision if GameStop is a good investment or "meme stock" you can take a look at this graphic andor this [spreadsheet](https://onedrive.live.com/View.aspx?resid=D645EE2EDB0B6!2167&authkey;=!A MFLvwFiMuIKSHI) that shows over 250 new hires from some big names. The spreadsheet is up-to-date the graphic isn't, fwtw.

Some quick examples:

- * Chief Technology Officer from Amazon and Zulily hired in March of '21
- * Sr. Director Product Management from Chewy and Amazon hired in March of '21
- * VP of Engineering, E-Commerce from Chewy and Wayfair hired in September of '21
- * VP, Program Management from Amazon and Walmart hired in September of '21
- * Sr. Manager, Category Finance from Amazon and Disney hired in November of '21
- * Finance Director Marketing, Loyalty & Pricing from Amazon and Citi hired in November of '21
- * Sr. Manager Small Parcel Transportation from UPS and Chewy hired in December of '21
- * Lead Software Engineer from Wayfair hired in January of '22
- * Sr. Software Engineer from Wayfair hired in January of '22
- * Sr. Merchant from Amazon and Groupon hired in January of '22
- * Senior Systems Analyst SAP BRIM from Microsoft hired in January of '22
- * Senior Manager of Cyber Resilience from T-Mobile hired in January of '22
- * Senior Director Inventory from Nike hired in January of '22

I mean, the list goes on and on and on and on and on... but you don't have take my word for it. Have a look for yourself in those links above this list. Do you really think ALL those people would be leaving those jobs to work at a "worthless" company? Yeah, no. Uh, yeeaaaah... no.

Also, ask yourself... is Wall Street trustworthy? Is it corrupted? Do you think it's possible they got too, too, too, too, too, too greedy and blinded and made a mistake - and got caught with their pants down? The Wall Street network has so much money they can astroturf just about any platform and any subject if they want - and believe me, they've done that with respect to GameStop. Believe that "teenagers" and "stupid retailers."

This is a good website that has a lot of resources if anyone is interested. The owners of this website were recently on CNBC (I think that's the channel; one of the financial channels/slots, anyway) and talked a little about the subject.

Then here is some really heavy DD around the subject that makes it totally 100% clear that there's major fraudulent activity in the entire market, which of course, includes GME - and to which Gary Gensler, the head of the SEC spoke of today when he said that, "When you place a market order - 90 - 95% do not go to the "lit" exchanges..." In other words, most of the time they go to "dark" exchanges which have no transparency and are totally and fully manipulatable and, essentially, at the end of the day, fraudulent as a mofo - to put it simply and in ELI5 terms (more of the interview if so inclined).

GameStop has over $1 Billion in cash on hand - that's one-billion dollars to use. They've been buying lots of warehouses and totally revamping their business model. The company is very likely going to be a powerhouse going into the future.

If you're willing to spend $100 or $200 on a stock or some tokens or a new project, seriously consider diversifying into some shares of GameStop.

Feel free to use this. Maybe change it up a little to suit your style or the context, of course, but there's some good information here for people and can, potentially, change some minds.
