I've been hodling Gme and lurking on this sub for more or less a year and have over the last two - three months seen a shift from CS being an "infinity pool" to which you committed shares which you don't sell to a "DRS 100% or else" mentality. I've taken some time off of Reddit so maybe I missed some DD explaining this but essentially my question is what happened. (Yes I saw GME earnings with them listing DRS'ed shares). My main concern being what if they don't turn off the buy button like in January but instead just DDOS or takedown one site this case being CS.

Don't get me wrong I'm not trying to tell you or anyone not to DRS shares just want to know what essentially made the shift happen.

Edit 1: Ty for all the replies. I guess asking a simple question without your first post being a CS post or having 100 posts on a Gme subreddit makes you a shill or trying to spread FUD. Idk how either of those takes makes sense because I was simply asking "why the sudden shift" / "why have ppl become more aggressive towards those who have yet to DRS".

- Thank you to all the apes who tried to answer the question the best they could
