I've been reading all the DD surrounding getting IRA shares registered. I have a smooth brain. My eyes glaze over trying to figure this out. I've read that I should just take the tax hit. I don't like that idea. I think I read something about transferring the shares here, and then transferring them there, and then transferring them back to here, or something like that. I got really lost trying to absorb that. This entire situation is really frustrating for me.

I decided to look for information on my own, which can sometimes be dangerous since I don't always understand what I'm doing. I searched Computershare and found that other companies have IRA plans through them. Here are screenshots of the first page of IRA applications for Walmart and Verizon. They are the same, which now that I think about it, makes sense.

Why can't GameStop do the same thing? It would make everything so much simpler for me. I decided I needed to do something about this, but then life went on and this got put on the back burner. Then yesterday there was a post on another sub, which unfortunately gained no traction at all, about contacting GameStop and requesting they establish an IRA plan. An email address was provided in that post, so that's exactly what I did. I emailed GameStop at ir@gamestop.com a short simple request:

"I would like to direct register GameStop shares that are in my regular and Roth IRAs. Other companies have IRAs set up with Computershare. Is there a reason GameStop doesn't do that? If there isn't anything preventing you from doing that, I am putting in my request for GameStop to make that happen. Thank you!"

The person who wrote the post yesterday said they did not receive a response back to their request, so I don't expect to either. Can you imagine if all retail investors holding GME wrote to GameStop with this request? Do you think GameStop would do this for their shareholders? I wonder how long it would take them to get this set up? It appears it wouldn't take that much work. I'm really anxious to get the float locked up, but I don't want to have to jump through a lot of hoops and/or pay penalties and taxes to get those shares registered.

If I have to jump through hoops, I will do that, but GameStop establishing an IRA plan seems to be the easiest option for me. I guess if I want that option, I better ask for it, so I did. If other apes find themselves in the same situation I'm in, you might consider asking too.
