Over the weekend we have SWIFT cut Russian off the platform with restrictive transaction for Russian's central bank. Today US announce sanction against its central bank that's total cut-off from USD supply led USD/RUB exchange rate surged 40% from last Friday close. This mean their USD loan has suddenly inflated by that amount, assuming non-hedge fx risk. This is not new, we have seen this happen with Indian Rupee devaluation which has hurt their economy badly. We saw this before during Asian financial crisis in 1997/1998 when Thai Baht was attacked by George Soros. Similarly, devaluation hurts! so is drastic appreciation to a funding currency like Japanese Yen and US dollar will hurt borrowers badly when market deleverage. Japanese Yen appreciation (Rose sharply) in 1998/1999 Asian financial crisis, 2000/2001 dot.com bubble and 2008 Great Financial Crisis it wiped out alot of borrowers balance sheet because unhedge fx risk ruin everything.

With US dollar appreciation it will hurt non-domicile US dollar borrowers meaning corporate or person not residing in US with huge USD loan rack up since 2008 when Ben Bernanke, Janet Yellen and Jim Powell started their printing press lending unlimited amount of USD. Sudden appreciation of USD, if not hedge, will just hurt everyone outside of US especially now in Russia ■■. Surging USD against Russian Ruble will drive Russian economy off the cliff which is why their central bank's raised interest rates to 20% from 9.25% to curb shadow banking system from expatriate their money home.

US sanctions Russian's central bank effectively cut them off USD supply and restricted their Oil transaction which generally denominated in USD but ever since 2011 establishment of BRICS alliance (Brazil, Russia, India, China, South Africa) and the formation of Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) they gradually moved out of USD system and trade amongst themselves in their local currencies (Real, Ruble, Rupee, Yuan, Rand) but still not fast enough because everyone loves money. They borrowed even more cheap USD from the US. Why? Because is dirt cheap to fund their economy. Nobody can resist this drug.

In other words, the US has created the world most lethal nuclear weapon, United State Dollar is the weapon of mass destruction (WMD). How convenient February is the last month FED will print its last $30 billion and from March onward no more printing and FED may still raise 25BP in March. All of these will be a CHOKE HOLD to global markets.

Month-end generally will have upward pressure on USD demand and it surge for many various reason. Funding of short position might just a reason that we are biased to believe. If USD supply is tight because of SWIFT cutting off Russian's central bank and flow of funds were affected we might see today's RRP to fall as market scramble to source dollar. If they can't source enough dollar to fund their activities, SHORT-SELLERS might have no choice but to start unwinding, position takers have no choice but to start liquidating their longs.

Honestly, i don't know how all these going to unfold but i am sensing it is not going to end well. The impact is yet to be seen and financial house of cards is within grasp. I still believe when market turn south, GME will go to the moon

Let's watch out for today's RRP it will give a good sense what's ahead. I am sorry to make you fall asleep with all these words. I fell asleep half way typing which explain why suddenly things don't make sense anymore ■■■
