A beautiful baby will soon be born. Her first name is MO and last, ASS (unfortunately). And she's our best chance to create free markets and a fairer future.

Retail investors caught hedge funds redhanded. Since the run in the stock price over the last year, several hedge funds got stuck in a position of potentially infinite losses due to the reckless shorting of GameStop. Their plan was (and still is) to NEVER cover their positions. The only way to never cover is to (1) bankrupt the company or (2) continue shorting and suppressing the price.

As we all know, GameStop is not a dying company; they have strategically positioned themselves for the future, debt-free, and recruited some of the best minds in the world, thanks to outstanding leadership. Option (1) is therefore out of the picture. In other words, they MUST continue to suppress the stock price. However, due to the recent buying pressure from retail, regular/legal shorting of the company will not be enough to keep the price down. Naked shorting, the action of shorting counterfeited shares, is, therefore, their only resort and results in short interest pushing above 100%.

Retail has since discovered a way to expose this illegal activity by directly registering (DRS) their GME shares to Computershare. This removes hedge funds' ability to short the shares without the investor's approval. It also makes it increasingly tricky and much more expensive for shorters to locate shares and short the stock. In other words, DRSing shortens the time it will take before the hedge funds MUST buy back the shares.

Many catalysts may result in insanely high stock price. But one thing works for sure. DRS!

We have now DRSed 42% of the available float, and the rate of DRSing seems only to accelerate over time as more people come in. Very soon, the float will be LOCKED. And shorters have no other choice than to buy every single shorted share back to close their positions. Extensive buying pressure can potentially send the price of GME infinitely high, creating the most significant redistribution of wealth EVER seen in history.

Hedge funds know this, and we know this. They are STUCK. They have tried every trick they know to have us sell. They have manipulated and controlled the narrative of the media. Nevertheless, WE STAND TOGETHER. We educate each other. We help each other. We hold. We DRS. We are apes. And we stand for free markets. APES TOGETHER STRONG.

After MO is born, let's make a difference for good. Raise her to invest in what matters. To be kind and fair.
