3. A stock that's too expensive

GameStop's astronomical stock price increase has its shares trading at unreasonably high levels. Before the meme stock frenzy, GameStop's stock had not traded above $100 in the last decade. As of this writing, GameStop is selling for $154.

Worse still, the business is in a fundamentally weaker position than it was at any time before the outbreak. The mismatch between business and stock price performance is another reason investors should steer clear of GameStop stock.
