I am a realtor in South Florida, and have dealt with plenty of cases where a seller is in legal troubles but due to Florida's homestead protection law they are able to keep their extremely expensive residence. It doesn't sound crazy to say someone is able to keep their primary residence to maintain a place to live, but these examples push this to the EXTREME.

In December of 2020, executives at both Melvin & Citadel bought luxurious estates in South Florida allowing them to shelters tens of millions of dollars should their companies go belly up.... where you at Melvin ■■

Our favorite Hedgie, Mr Shitadel himself, the mayonnaise king of the North, Kenny Griffin purchased a $25 million dollar property on star island to add to his assemblage on the island. He also owns a penthouse in a newly built Faena House and has another Assemblage in palm beach which I would suspect would be moved to another family members name for legal reasons when shit hits the fan...

https://trd.media/fla/fKjNIY

And the runner up for Hedgie of the year is Melvins own, Gabe Plotkin, who also made a hefty real estate purchase in December of 2020, acquiring 2 lots next to each other in Miami Beach for $44 million. Not long after they announced massive losses, their website is down and it seems they may have closed up shop... timing ■

https://trd.media/fla/PqxIou

I am just another smooth brained ape just looking for a lambo but I thought this was interesting and worth a read while you are crunching down crayons ■

These Hedgies obviously had a game plan, and with the political landscape changing at the same time, the moves make sense snd coincide with their shorting efforts as this was protection for their families.

Honestly I just have 2 questions for all you crayon eating apes....

1. Wen moon
2. Wen lambo

■■■■ ■■