Title: OH NO. I plotted $GME against the peak price percentage from mean of most OTC stocks. It looks like there are more zombies than we originally thought.

Each dot is either a Pink Current, Pink Limited or Pink No Information company. The left axis represents the percentage change from the mean stock price to the peak stock price between November 2020 and September 2021. Basically, each dot represents the PEAK PRICE of all these companies. The right axis represents the stock price of GME.

EDIT 2 (for reference): BLIAQ (Blockbuster) is Pink No Information. SHLDQ (Sears Holdings Corp) is Pink No Information.

It really looks like a lot of zombie stocks came back to life as a consequence of GME price being driven down in late January. Since then, the frequency of zombie stocks coming back to life has dramatically increased to this day.

EDIT:

Pink Current Information companies are those that follow the International Reporting Standard or Alternative Reporting Standard. These companies make filings publicly available through the OTC Disclosure & News Service.

Pink Limited Information companies include troubled firms in financial distress, bankruptcy, or those with accounting issues. This category also includes companies that are unwilling to meet the OTC Pink Basic Disclosure Guidelines.

Pink No Information companies are those businesses that do not provide any disclosure at all.
